Use of this form

This form is to be used by companies applying to be registered as building engineering contractors with the Building Services Board (the Board).

Registration as a building engineering contractor entitles the registration holder to provide building engineering services.

Registration as a building engineering contractor

A person, partnership or company must be registered as a building engineering contractor to:

- contract with others to provide building engineering services;
- issue technical certificates; or
- use a prescribed title such as registered building engineering contractor.

When considering an application for registration as a building engineering contractor the Board considers among other factors, the applicant's financial history, financial capacity, insurance, and arrangements in place to manage and supervise building engineering services.

Nominated supervisor

Every building engineering contractor must have at least one registered building engineering practitioner appointed as the nominated supervisor at all times.

Contractor levels

Building engineering practitioners are registered by area (civil, mechanical, structural, and fire safety) and level (professional, technologist or associate).

Building engineering contractors are generally registered by level only. This gives multi-disciplinary firms the flexibility to provide engineering services in any area in which they employ an appropriately registered practitioner to properly manage and supervise the work.

The exception to this rule is fire systems technologists and associates, which are registered separately because they have a wider scope of work than other technologists and associates (because low rise buildings don't have fire systems).

The levels of building engineering contractor, and the work that may be undertaken by each, is outlined below.

Building engineering contractor – professional

A building engineering contractor – professional is authorised to undertake building engineering work for any building or incidental structure.

To be registered as a building engineering contractor – professional, a company must have at least one nominated supervisor who is registered as a building engineering practitioner – professional.

Building engineering contractor – technologist

A building engineering contractor – technologist is authorised to undertake building engineering work for medium rise buildings, being:

- a Class 1 or Class 10 building or incidental structure; and
- a Class 2 to 9 building up to a maximum of three storeys above a class 7a storey, but not including Type A construction except for class 2, 3 and 9 buildings.

To be registered as a building engineering contractor – technologist, a company must have at least one nominated supervisor who is registered as a building engineering practitioner – technologist or professional.

Building engineering contractor – associate

A building engineering contractor – associate is authorised to undertake building engineering work for low rise buildings, being:

- a Class 1 or Class 10 building or incidental structure; and
- a Class 2 to 9 building with a floor area not exceeding 2,000m<sup>2</sup>, of Type C construction only.

To be registered as a building engineering contractor – associate, a company must have at least one nominated supervisor who is registered as a building engineering practitioner – associate, technologist or professional.

Building engineering contractor, fire systems – technologist

A building engineering contractor, fire systems – technologist is authorised to undertake building engineering work for any type of building or incidental structure.

To be registered as a building engineering contractor, fire systems – technologist, a company must have at least one nominated supervisor who is registered as a building engineering practitioner, fire systems – technologist.

Building engineering contractor, fire systems – associate

A building engineering contractor, fire systems – associate is authorised to undertake building engineering work for medium rise buildings, being:

- a Class 1 or Class 10 building or incidental structure; and
- a Class 2 to 9 building up to a maximum of three storeys above a class 7a storey, but not including Type A construction except for class 2, 3 and 9 buildings.

To be registered as a building engineering contractor, fire systems – associate, a company must have at least one nominated supervisor who is registered as a building engineering practitioner, fire systems – associate or technologist.

Managing building engineering services

Every building engineering contractor must have arrangements in place to ensure the provision of building engineering services is properly managed and supervised.

To provide building engineering work in one or more of the prescribed engineering areas (structural, fire safety, civil or mechanical), a building engineering contractor must satisfy the Board that it will have appropriately registered building engineering practitioner(s) undertaking or supervising and managing the work. A practitioner must be registered in the relevant area, and level (professional, technologist or associate), to the building engineering services which will be provided.

The building engineering practitioner may be a nominated supervisor, or otherwise employed or engaged by the building engineering contractor.
