Consumer Protection is committed to providing education and assistance to Indigenous consumers. All you have to do is ask us.

Ask Us

Consumer Protection works with Indigenous newspapers and radio stations across Western Australia to get messages out to people through the media.

There is collaboration between Consumer Protection and other consumer agencies to ensure Indigenous consumers across the country are well informed and current issues are being addressed.

A specialist unit monitors Western Australia to help Consumer Protection better understand emerging trends relevant to Indigenous consumers.

But you are our eyes and ears. We need the community to keep in touch with us to raise issues, report traders and make complaints.

ASK US

Protection for Indigenous consumers

If you have a question about your mobile phone contract, about your landlord, or if you feel you have been pressured into buying something you really didn't want, just ask us.

Protection for Indigenous consumers

If you go shopping, rent a home, buy cars or pay tradespeople to do jobs then Consumer Protection has information to help you.

Many Indigenous consumers are unaware of their rights and responsibilities when buying goods and services.

We're all protected by the Australian Consumer Law, whether you live in Western Australia or any other state or territory.

For people in remote areas, there may be a lack of competition for businesses and fewer consumer protection workers in the area. Indigenous consumers can be particularly vulnerable and dishonest traders might prey on that.

Consumer Protection is committed to providing education and assistance to Indigenous consumers. All you have to do is ask us.

We promise to respond promptly to any queries or complaints you may have and to act on information provided to us.

So pick up the phone for a yarn to one of our Indigenous Community Education Officers, send us an email, or write us a note and put it in the post.

Unscrupulous traders including door-to-door sellers are a high priority with the National Indigenous Consumer Strategy (NICS) reference group.

They are currently conducting research into increased door-to-door sales to Indigenous consumers, particularly in regional, remote and very remote areas and areas that have a high population of Indigenous people.

Introducing the Indigenous Community Education team

Consumer Protection has dedicated Indigenous Community Education Officers.

The team can help you to understand your rights and responsibilities when renting a place, buying cars or paying for them to be repaired, signing up for contracts, shopping for goods and services or operating as a business.

You may have heard of them, or know them already. They are often at Indigenous community events handing out publications about your consumer rights and the issues affecting your community.

To focus on the issues and locations where education is most needed we have an Indigenous Consumers Education Plan and work with the National Indigenous Consumer Strategy.

You can read more at www.nics.org.au or www.commerce.wa.gov.au/consumerprotection

Consumer protection in your community

According to our Indigenous Consumers Count Report (2004-05), the top issues causing problems for Indigenous consumers are around tenancy and renting a home.

We regulate landlords and can help you to know where you stand when it comes to inspections, property damage, rent payments and ending a tenancy agreement.

Do you have a family member that has been pressured into buying something they don't want or have you had trouble getting an item repaired under warranty? We can help, give us a call.

The Department of Commerce can also provide information on safety at work and your pay and work conditions. Contact Labour Relations, Wageline on 1300 655 266 or WorkSafe on 1300 307 877 for more information.

Australian Consumer Law

Many Indigenous consumers and businesses may not be aware of their rights and obligations when buying and selling goods.

Consumer Protection promotes and enforces the Australian Consumer Law (ACL). Under this law:

- unfair contract terms in standard form contracts (like take it or leave it deals offered by mobile phone companies) are regulated.
- all sellers must provide 'consumer guarantees' regardless of any other warranty on offer. This means that all goods and services sold must:
 - be of acceptable quality (safe and durable);
 - be fit for the purpose and match the description, sample or demonstration model shown; and
 - have a 10 day cooling off period for any unsolicited (uninvited) agreements, such as door-to-door or telemarketing sales.
- lay-by sales must be in writing and there are controls on any fees and charges.
- receipts must be provided for purchases over $75, but you can request one for purchases which are less than that amount.
